Dear Jane Flennery,

I just read a recent article in a Marie Claire magazine about genetically modified food. I felt I had to write to you.

Not too long ago, like everybody else I'd never even heard of GM food. Then my parents visited me from England and proceeded to tell me about how everybody in England was in an outrage about GM food and just didn't want it, as stated in the article also the rest of Europe didn't want it either. They had heard it all started in America and here was I I hadn't even heard of it.

Then on reading the article, it sparked my interest again.

The truth that hurts is that I have probably been eating this food for quite sometime now, without knowing, luckily I grow vegetables in the summer, but it still doesn't last through the winter. I am not a highly educated person, but it angers me to think how the government treats us like we are all stupid and not able to make up our own minds about things. Also the fact that they ~~blatantly~~ blatantly keep us in the dark about this and so many other things, just amazes me.

As I said I am not highly educated but would like to support your movement in any way I can.

I would like to see organic ^{sold} foods more cheaply and plentiful as my income sometimes finds them very expensive (now I know to buy them)

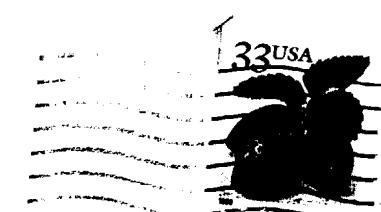

Anyway yours sincerely

Mrs Pam Lepper.
